

FEEDBACK

PRODUCTIVE ASSETS

These are the assets that help you remain productive across a long life.

Valuable knowledge - this is the extent to which the knowledge you have accumulated up to now is valuable and will remain so in the near future.

Your Valuable knowledge score is 4.7 (out of 5)

You have already invested your time and energy in building a store of valuable knowledge and therefore you are well positioned to build the next stage of your productive life. However, you will want to consider how the potential of moving into a different stage of your life, perhaps a new professional role, may accelerate the need for building valuable knowledge.

Peers - productive assets also depend on supportive colleagues who are prepared to mentor you and introduce you to their network.

Your Peers score is 3 (out of 5)

You do have a network that you can utilise at work but it could be more extensive. You need to spend time focusing on reaching out and extending this network to a wider group of peers who can support you. You will want to carefully analyse what elements of a network you have already and build a plan for how to complement these.

Reputation - much knowledge creation depends on how others see you - and whether they view you as someone worth building a relationship with.

Your Reputation score is 3.3 (out of 5)

Whilst you are not ignored by your peers as a source of advice, you do not stand out amongst them either. You will want to consider how you can become more of a go-to source of advice: do you need to demonstrate your expertise more often and in a more visible way by speaking at conferences, blogging, speaking up within your organisation or at industry bodies?

VITALITY ASSETS

This is the engine of a long, productive life and investing in keeping energetic and living a balanced life is crucial.

Health - good habits around health are essential to a long productive life.

Your Health score is 4 (out of 5)

Building and maintaining your health is not a top priority for you but you seem to be aware of the elements that go in to it and make some effort. Make sure you have defined what building and maintaining good health looks like for you and have a detailed plan – and stick with it.

You are already taking your health seriously and you will want to keep this up. Make sure you consider whether the potential of moving into a different stage of your life may impact your health and require an adjustment of your plan for maintaining good health.

Balanced Living - over a long life actively establishing a positive balance between work life and home life is crucial.

Your Balanced Living score is 4 (out of 5)

You are already actively managing the cycle of energy between work and home, and are having some success at ensuring it is positive and your stress levels are controlled. As you look forward, and also consider the potential of moving into a different stage, might maintaining this positive cycle require more or a different effort?

Regenerative Friendships - a crucial support to a productive life and one of the key components of happiness.

Your Regenerative Friendships score is 3.5 (out of 5)

Your friends are important to you and you have actively invested in maintaining and nourishing these friendships. This is great because the support of friends and especially the stimulation of different ideas and networks will be crucial going forward. As you look forward to these next stages make sure you continue to invest in these friendships.

TRANSFORMATIONAL ASSETS

These are crucial to supporting you to shift across stages and to explore your choices and identity.

Self-knowledge - these are crucial to supporting you to shift across stages and to explore your choices and identity.

Your Self-knowledge score is 3.3 (out of 5)

You have built some self-knowledge and whilst that is a step in the right direction, you may want to make this more of a priority so you will be better equipped to transition into the next stage of your life. Are you really happy with things as they are? Are there forces, either internal or external to you, that are preventing you from changing?

Diverse Networks - you are more likely to positively change and to widen your choices and opportunities if you have a wide and diverse network of friends and acquaintances.

Your Diverse Networks score is 3 (out of 5)

Whilst your networks are somewhat diverse, you would benefit from focusing more on connecting with more people that are different from you. Analyse how you have become connected with the people who are different from you and consider if you can replicate and scale up these sources of connection.

$ TANGIBLE ASSETS

Your Tangible score is 4 (out of 5)

Congratulations. You clearly have both an aptitude for financial planning and have dedicated time to make sure that your planning is successful and hopefully you are in a position to enjoy that success. Looking forward do be aware that you will probably find it useful to seek more advice than you have done in the past and you should think of who might help you in that way.

Print